

THE RAINBOW HOUSE

Peri was a thoughtful, sensitive, and delicate child. Her loving nature and sincerity were so evident that other children competed to be her friend. It was known that she was a bit more mature than her peers.

Peri came to school sad that day. She had been harboring a secret that had been gnawing at her for a while. It was growing day by day, weighing heavily on her heart. She wondered if her friends had secrets too. She thought about confiding in her closest friend, hoping it might bring her some relief.

When the bell rang, Peri went out to the schoolyard for some fresh air. Her close friend joined her, noticing that she had seemed distracted for the past few days. "Peri, you've been lost in thought for the past few days. Is something bothering you?" her friend asked sincerely. Peri nodded her head slightly, acknowledging the question, but chose to remain silent. Her friend persisted, and Peri, with sorrowful eyes, looked at her. She was afraid to open up, fearing that her friend might accidentally reveal her secret to someone else.

Since starting middle school, the two friends had shared many things between them and trusted each other. They had no bad memories to worry about. With this trust, Peri decided to confide in her friend.

Her friend listened intently, curious and excited by what she heard. But when the bell rang, she had to run to class without being able to give her opinion.

Days passed. Peri was too proud to ask her friend anything. Her friend also refrained from sharing her thoughts with Peri.

A few weeks later, a heated argument broke out among the students on the school bus. The students were arguing mercilessly with each other. When a large male classmate insulted a petite female classmate by saying, "Speak as much as your size allows, you weakling," the girl buried her face in the seat in front of her and began to cry. At that moment, Peri's confidante came over to the crying girl and said, "It's shameful of you, look, Peri is dealing with a big problem and still manages to stay strong," revealing Peri's secret.

Peri was stunned and devastated. Her eyes filled with tears, but she couldn't bring herself to cry.

Similar unpleasant incidents occasionally occurred in class and on the playground for no reason, fueling mocking remarks among friends.

Peri's distress started to take a toll on her. Her sleep pattern was disrupted. She wondered if there was any way to get over such events. As her mother had taught her, taking deep breaths would be good for her heart. She sighed so deeply that her strong breath could inflate several balloons.

At that moment, something incredible happened. An outer space balloon suddenly appeared in the sky and floated down in front of Peri.

Peri was astonished and stood frozen for a while. What brought her back to reality was the red heart-shaped windows of the space balloon. These adorable windows danced and twisted as if they were dancing and played a delightful melody. This melody filled Peri's heart with peace and welcomed her.

Peri was a very intelligent and studious child who read every chance she got. Her perfect scores in all her subjects surprised and made her teachers proud.

She eagerly answered her classmates' questions about lessons and helped them with their homework when they were stuck.

Peri had devoured a series of books on artificial intelligence that her mother had given her for her birthday. Her knowledge of artificial intelligence helped her realize that the space balloon was controlled by AI. Peri turned her face towards the windows, smiled warmly at them, and waved her hand enthusiastically. The windows began to move even more energetically, as if they were saluting her. They started playing a different and charming music that was pleasant to the ear. Peri's astonishment turned into admiration and relaxation.

As Peri relaxed, a light staircase descended from the balloon. It was also making graceful, dance-like movements, accompanied by sweet music. The edges of the staircase were adorned with colorful, twinkling lights, creating a dazzling light show. It seemed as if the lights were inviting Peri to climb the space balloon.

Peri took a determined step towards the stairs. As she climbed them one by one, she felt she was embarking on an exciting adventure. As soon as Peri settled into the space balloon, it took off swiftly. They were traveling at a very sweet but very fast pace.

Within a short time, Peri's admiring gaze focused on the dazzling house made of diamond stones. This strikingly beautiful house was located at the right end of a magnificent rainbow. The vibrant colors of the rainbow were captivating, and its seven different colored arms formed a gentle curve. It seemed as if the seven arms wanted to embrace Peri. Peri was deeply moved.

As the space balloon glided towards the rainbow, Peri's heart skipped a beat. The balloon lowered its lighted staircase onto the first color of the rainbow, the purple road. As Peri descended the stairs one by one, she sighed, "Oh, my sister Dora loves the rainbow so much. I wish she could be here with me now! I must find a way to bring her here."

The surprises continued to unfold. The purple road was breathtakingly beautiful. While Peri was deeply impressed by this extraordinary beauty, a skateboard suddenly took off from the rainbow house.

Peri's heart almost stopped with excitement. What did she see? The skateboard wrapped a scarf around Peri's foot, tying itself to her. What kind of magic was this that the skateboard, locked onto her foot, instantly lifted Peri into the air! Peri began to zoom back and forth from one end of the glorious purple road to the other on the skateboard at an incredible speed.

The feelings Peri experienced were extraordinary. Her inner worries disappeared. Her heart was filled with joy. Her laughter began to echo around her. A cute little bird, sensing Peri's exuberant joy, wanted to share it. The mysterious bird's loving and sincere gaze at Peri, its landing on her shoulder, and its chirping made Peri soar with happiness.

Peri kept skateboarding back and forth on the rainbow roads, with the beautiful bird on her shoulder. With overflowing excitement, she began to sing:

To the far end of the rainbow Or to the near side with cosmic speed
With the skateboard launched from the unique house I slide with free happiness

An unmatched feeling I've never experienced My worries suddenly flew away
My anxiety and troubles shrank in my eyes I'm more joyful than I've ever been

I slide joyfully on my skateboard On the colorful roads of the rainbow I learned to think well, to dream well
You grow stronger, you cope with your sadness

Peri couldn't believe how quickly she had rid herself of her worries. Singing her song loudly and repeatedly, "I'm coping with my troubles and worries," made her feel even more relaxed. It was an unparalleled feeling to find peace.

She had to share the special feelings she was experiencing with her sister and friends. They needed to find a way to get rid of their worries too.

What she thought made Peri realize how much she loved her friends. Their flaws seemed to shrink in her eyes. So the words spoken in anger were insignificant. They could be overlooked. Because her friends were generally well-intentioned.

It's impossible not to be affected by what Peri's pure heart was feeling. The space balloon was getting ready to take Peri back home. The red hearts started dancing and singing their mysterious songs again. This time, they were making their windows hop and jump in another delightful way, making Peri giggle sweetly.

As Peri descended from the balloon, she began to wave her hand with excitement and love. From the windows of the space balloon, voices were heard together: "We'll be waiting for you next time with your friends, Peri!"

Peri was extremely happy! She continued to sing her song at the top of her lungs with excitement.

Summary: The story follows Peri, a thoughtful and sensitive child, who struggles with a troubling secret. Her anxiety deepens when her friend unintentionally reveals her secret. As Peri grapples with her emotions, a magical space balloon appears, leading her on a fantastical journey to a diamond house at the end of a rainbow. This adventure, filled with joy and wonder, helps Peri overcome her worries, teaching her the power of positive thinking and the importance of friendship.